COMMUNIQUÉ

A Defense Intelligence Agency Publication

on 1 October 2004

In celebration of DIA's forty-third birthday, this issue of the Communiqué is dedicated to the many talented men and women throughout DIA who perform functions so vital to the success of DIA's diverse mission areas. This exclusive issue conveys information about key agency activities through the use of pictures, rather than through informative textual articles. The agency's Communications Board led this project where 30 disposable cameras were used to take photos of you and your colleagues "in action," to capture all aspects of a typical workday in DIA. In celebration of DIA's anniversary, the theme of this issue, "A Day in the Life at DIA," is intended to increase understanding of DIA's mission areas, how it supports various customers and, most importantly, to recognize the people who perform them. The Communiqué staff hopes you enjoy this special anniversary issue!

so begins...
a Day in

Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara established the Defense Intelligence Agency in October 1961 to improve defense intelligence by merging many of its functions under a single authority, fortifying DoD-wide intelligence collection, analysis and dissemination. On October 1, we celebrated 43 years of service, providing timely, objective and cogent intelligence to our country.

We still collect, integrate, analyze and disseminate that intelligence. However, we do it far differently than in previous years. Our constant evaluation of processes, renovation and innovation ensures our agency remains the critical component in defense intelligence.

New challenges to our nation's security and new developments in our own operational concepts provide us the opportunity to be more agile, adaptive and aggressive. Our agency's vision for intelligence transformation focuses on shifting intelligence collection from a reconnaissance to persistent surveillance paradigm, incorporating modern information technologies and management principals and achieving true all-source analysis.

Today, our workforce operates across command, service, agency, department and even national lines, reflecting the fact that collaboration is our greatest combat multiplier. We must further promote interoperability and enable members of the defense and greater intelligence community to better meet evolving challenges and seize opportunities.

Recently, we began a series of strategic planning initiatives to meet future demands and to move DIA forward as the premier provider of defense intelligence. We have added nearly 1,200 new employees to our rolls. Twenty years after DIA dedicated the Defense Intelligence Analysis Center in May 1984, the DIAC expansion project couldn't be timelier, providing our growing workforce a state-of-the-art and secure work environment.

In commemorating our 43rd anniversary we honor those who came before us. I also thank you, DIA's current work force, for rising to meet today's challenges. Your talent and dedication to duty continue to be essential to our present and future success.

It is an honor and a privilege for me to be your Director. Happy anniversary, DIA!
